It is a pity the fly is so fond of the food that children like, for it makes so much trouble. The cake that mother makes is just as great a delight to the fly as to the children, and he often gets the first whack at it. Mother makes the cale and frosts it. The ougar is still soft. She lays it on the kitchen table to cool. In comes the little bouse Sp-the very one that just happened to be visiting an infantile paralysis baby a few blocks away. He stood on that baby's mouth and got his feet soiled with the paralysis germe. He sees the cake and his mouth waters. Zip! He lands in the middle of the frosting. His feet stick in the soft white stuff and he is nearly caught; but he
